All Legionnaires, members of their families, Auxiliary members and their families and all prospective members are invited.

Lillian Luckenbach in Los Angeles with Huge Cargo of Radio Receivers

Virginia Leeko, left, and Billie C. opeland superintend the unloading of the big Atwater Kent cargo.

With her hold filled with radio receivers and equipment, the steamer, Lillian Luckenbach established a new record as a radio carrier when she recently arrived at the port of Los Angeles.

The cargo, which is said to be the largest radio cargo shipped to any state by water, was consigned to Ray Thomas, Inc., Southern California distributor of Atwater Kent radio and as soon as the big vessel was unloaded the receivers and speakers were rushed to the company's display rooms to fill dealer orders which have been piling up since the radio show closed.

Among the various receivers were models 50 and 33, the two new receivers which were features of the radio show and which are declared by experts to be the final word in radio.

Model 50 is the new shielded receiver while model 33, is the new receiver with the great tone quality and selectivity which has earned its name "The Spirit of the Air."

Because of the fact that the Lillian Luckenbach usually brings in a consignment of radios on every trip she makes to this port she has become known to longshoremen and steamship officials as the "radio ship," and whenever anyone says the radio ship is in it is understood that this Luckenbach liner has again arrived in port.

New Asphalt Bed in California Reveals Many Valuable Fossils

Mistletoe twigs, leaves, flowers and fruits, and manzanita wood, leaves, flowers and fruits, preserved in perfect condition for tens of thousands of years in a bed of asphalt, are among unique fossils just uncovered in a newly discovered site at Carpinteria, near Santa Barbara.

A first report of findings was recently published in Science by representatives of the Santa Barbara Museum of Natural History, first workers in the field, and by representatives of the Carnegie Foundation and the University of California at Berkeley and at Los Angeles.

The asphalt bed, though noted many years ago, was not suspected to contain fossil remains until this spring, according to the report issued by Director Ralph Hoffman of the Santa Barbara Museum. Bones were first uncovered by a steam shovel digging road material out of the pit, and as a result scientific work started this summer.

The new bed, located on the Lillian Higgins ranch, is unique, the investigators report, principally because of the extent of plant life found and its particularly fine preservation. Also the new bed will serve as a check on the age and geographic accessibility of the two previously known asphalt beds at Rancho La Brea, near Los Angeles, and at McKittrick, in Kern county.

First word of the discovery was brought to the Santa Barbara Museum by the paving contractors, and an investigation was made by Norton Stuart, curator. The Santa Barbara Museum then called in Professor Loye Miller of the Biology Department of the University of California at Los Angeles; Ralph W. Chaney, honorary curator of the paleobotanical collections of the University; Herbert L. Mason, associate in phytogeographic botany at the University; and Chester Stock, formerly of the University staff, but now connected with the California Institute of Technology.

Dr. Stock reports that among animal remains found are the bones of the large dire wolf, prehistoric deer, horse, coyote, California fox, skunk and chipmunk. Dr. Miller reports eight determinable species of birds, four of which are extinct—the formidable teratornis, one of the largest birds of the condor variety; the paravapo turkey; the nephronotops and neoxyps, somewhat similar to the old world vulture. Mason's report, in addition to the mistletoe and manzanita, whose flowers, especially of the latter, are unbelievably well preserved, cones, leaves and wood from two varieties of pine and cypress which are no-longer found in that vicinity.

From their study, the botanists state that at one time the country in the vicinity of Carpinteria and Santa Barbara was probably heavily wooded, and that the climate was markedly different in the not long distant Pleistocene era, with heavier rainfall and heavier summer fogs. The cypress and pines (Pinus radiata) of Monterey and Carmel are really relics of the Pleistocene era, they state, and the countryside there is probably comparable now to what Carpinteria was anywhere from 50,000 to 1,000,000 years ago.

The pine cones found, Chaney points out, could be thrown into a fireplace and burned with even more success than those growing on trees today because of the oil with which they are impregnated. Excavation work on the site will be continued this fall.
